Vinita, Okla. Tuesday, January 14.

Princeton certainly should have its $300,000 stadium, even if they have to sell all the other buildings to get it.

Champ Clark says no congressmen can be bought to favor or oppose a bill. But some can be scared by the fear of not getting re-elected.

It seems strange that ordinary stamps are not good on the parcel post, but of course something has to be done to keep the government printers going.

The steamship that was carrying J. P. Morgan and Nelson W. Aldrich grounded in the fog. That shows what a mistake was made in not inviting Mr. Morgan to take the helm.

Editors have been appointed senators from Texas and Arkansas, and it is hoped that they won't throw the president's message into the waste basket along with the spring poetry.

The suffragist parade at Washington is to show the development of woman's costume from the Garden of Eden until now. Many popular actresses have already applied for Eve's role.

The naval academy middies may not be able to keep a three inch distance between themselves and their partners, but at least they could refrain from rubbing the buttons off a girl's dress.

An examination of forty children from two public schools in New York City show some striking results. The forty pupils examined were the worst that could be found in the two schools, eighteen of them being so stupid that they were in ungraded classes, eleven were so stupid that they required three terms to do the work of one term and eleven were delinquent. All of the forty children had defective vision. They were fitted with proper glasses and after six months it was found that thirty-two of them had made astonishing progress. These thirty-two were under as many different teachers. A report of this work has been made to the board of education recommending that the entire care of the school children, mental, moral and physical, be vested in one department with a single head and that that should be the board of education, that a sufficient number of doctors be trained to deal with all defects of school children who are at present in the category of ungraded, backward or disciplinary cases; that any child whose work is unsatisfactory for one term should be examined and all defects of structure and habit corrected as far as possible. A report of the work appears in a recent number of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

WHY ADVERTISED GOODS COST LESS.

The suggestion is sometimes thoughtlessly made that the buyer has to pay for the cost of advertising. It would be equally reasonable for a small store to claim, because a large store employed more clerks, that the patrons of the large store had to pay an extra price because of these additional clerks. Almost any man by persistent advertising, justly proportioned to his business, can double his trade. If he did so, it is not likely that his rent, taxes, book-keeping cost, insurance, and similar items would be doubled. Very

OUR PRESIDENTS.

ANDREW JACKSON, Seventh President. Born March 15, 1767, at Warraw, North Carolina. Early education deficient. Studied law at Salisbury, N. C., and was admitted to the bar and began practice at Nashville, Tenn. In 1796 assisted in framing the constitution of Tennessee, and later was elected to Congress. In 1797 was elected to the United States Senate, but resigned in the following year. Was Judge of the Supreme Court of Tennessee from 1798 to 1804. In 1813 he was Major-General of militia and commanded in the campaign against the Creek Indians and there first attracted public notice to his military talent. In 1814 was commissioned Major-General and defeated the English in the battle of New Orleans. Was afterward engaged in military operations in Florida, and in 1821 was appointed Military Governor of that territory. In 1823 he was elected to the United States Senate. In 1828 was elected President and was re-elected in 1832 by a large majority. He left office at the height of his popularity and retired to Nashville, where he had a quiet and uneventful life until his death, which occurred on June 8, 1845.

likely they might not be increased one-half.
Every article has to be charged something for these general expenses, which keep running along whether you do much business or not. Consequently if a merchant doubles his business, and increases his fixed charges less than a half, the amount to be charged to each article to cover these expenses is much less. Hence instead of advertised goods costing the public more, they cost the public less.

THE FARMERS AND CORNERS.

The United States supreme court, having laid down the principle that corners in food, clothing material, etc., are in violation of the United States law, it remains to be seen whether the speculators can continue to gamble with the poor man's loaf of bread and cotton night shirt as the stakes.

While public sentiment is very generally against corners, some rather plausible arguments in their favor have always been advanced. It is said that they enable the farmers to get more for their cotton and grain, and that they prevent foreign countries from getting our crop supplies at too low prices.

But does the farmer get the benefit of corners?

What is the farmer doing when the storms of financial frenzy, resulting from attempts to corner the market, break loose on the produce exchanges?

The history of these furies shows that the corner rarely happens until the farmer has disposed of most of his crop. In the big attempt to corner the wheat market in 1909, it was claimed that but 21 per cent of the grain remained in the farmer's hands.

The farmer is pretty thoroughly impregnated with that ancient maxim of cold prudence "Let well enough alone." When he sees the bulls pushing the price of his produce up to sky rocket figures does he tuck down to the telegraph office, and wire his agents to take a moderate profit? Rarely, so far as the information of this writer goes.

His instinct under such circumstances would seem to tell him to let the good work go on. He watches the operations of the brokers much as he watches the beneficent action of the rain and the sun on his fields, with the feeling that there is nothing he can do to interfere with any benefit to himself. He waits, hoping for still higher prices.

The history of these speculations suggests that the farmer does not usually sell until prices begin to waver and drop. By the time that his order gets in, the psychological moment has passed, and much less is realized than could have been obtained a short time previous.

The great objection to corners is not merely that they raise the price to the consumer, but that they discourage the weaker mills and factories from buying raw material, leading to a general stoppage of manufacturing and milling.
